

Liz Miller, a senior at Delaware Valley High School, is helping to lead the school as vice-president of the senior class. Miller is a member of National Honor Society, Teens Against Tobacco Use, Student Council, and the Athletic Leadership Council. She is also a four-year member of both the basketball and softball teams. Miller is consistently on the high honor roll. “Being involved teaches me to manage my time wisely and also it teaches me to work well with other people,” Miller said. She also volunteers for the local food pantry and Relay for Life. “I’d like to be remembered as a good student, friend, and a nice person who provided a helping hand,” Miller said.

Delaware Valley senior center Jack Fagan is the epitome of student and athlete. Fagan is not only a force on the football field, but he is also a force in the classroom. Last year, Fagan was recognized as an All-League center and defensive tackle and an All-Region center. He is also a dedicated member of the wrestling team and Student Council. Fagan has attained an impressive 4.3 grade point average. “It is a good experience working with other people and making a commitment whether to a team or to a club,” Fagan said. “Being exposed to different people and things help mold me for the future.” Fagan also finds time to volunteer for the Warrior Kid Football camp in the summer. Furthermore, he volunteers for a roadside cleanup and Relay for Life. “I am always happy to do volunteer work for different causes,” he said. “It makes me feel good that I can help others.”
