

James Matthews, a senior at Delaware Valley High School, hopes to be remembered as a student who has had a positive impact on the people around him. Matthews is a member of National Honor Society, FBLA, Mu Alpha Theta, Junior Historians, volleyball, and soccer. “Being involved in activities at school has helped me to learn to work and get along with people which is a necessary advisory in the business world,” he said. Matthews also volunteers for Relay for Life and United Way’s Day of Caring. Most recently he has been asked by administration to devise an architectural layout for the high school’s new guidance office space. In the fall, he will be attending Penn State University to major in Architectural Engineering.

Senior lacrosse standout Gianni Gelormino feels that sports have played a large role in his life. “It has been a great and life-changing experience to help kids build a foundation in sports,” he said. Not only does Gelormino shine on the field, but also he excels academically. He is a member of National Honor Society and Mu Alpha Theta. “Being involved has surrounded me with a great group of proactive students and influential people,” he said. “I have gained a lot of memories that I would not trade for the world.” He also finds the time to volunteer at youth lacrosse camps and P.A.Y.A.L. youth football. As a student-athlete, Gelormino wants to be remembered as a great lacrosse player who helped build an even better program at DV. Gelormino will attend and play lacrosse at Vassar College in the fall.
